Fighting to save the "Kissing Bridge"

Updated Sun. Nov. 30 2008 9:24 PM ET

Concerned residents in West Montrose held their first board meeting this afternoon to save what they call "an icon of simpler times."

The West Montrose Bridge is nearly one hundred and thirty years old and is the last covered bridge in Ontario.

The Township of Woolwich is reviewing an application to build a gravel pit nearby and residents say its approval could destroy the essence of their community.

Tony Dowling, a resident, says "You see the Mennonites working in their fields, you see the kids playing in the school yards, with their dresses and their black pants and white dress shirts and you realize that it's not all about the bridge... yes the bridge is the centre of it, but it's much more than that."

Members of the Bridgekeepers Association will be appealing to all levels of government.

Council members say they are waiting for recommendations from the Township's Engineering and Planning Department before moving forward.
